The innervation of the heart by the recurrent laryngeal nerve in humans. The connection between the recurrent laryngeal nerve (RLN) and the sinus node (SN) was studied in 4 human subjects. Endogenous ligands [false neurotransmitters (FT) such as acetylcholine (ACh) or false transmitters (FTT) such as bradykinin (BK)], electrical stimulation, and barium were used to localize and physiologically characterize the sinus-innervating vagal fibers. The RLN and the vagus nerve (in the neck region outside the confluence of the RLN) were both stained with specific anterograde tracers. The SN was transversely cut in human and sheep hearts, and the nerve fibers were stained with cresyl violet and aniline blue. The RLN in sheep was also studied in serial sections. The RLN and the vagus nerve were in close proximity to the SN. Electrical stimulation of the RLN in 1 case induced a small increase in SN firing rate and a shorter AV nodal refractory period. The effective vagal trunks, which innervate the ventricles, originated in the vagus nerve and passed along the confluence of the RLN, forming a network of fine axons that enveloped the SN. This study shows that the RLN is a branch of the vagus nerve. This information may be relevant in the study of heart function and more specifically in the development of vagomimetic drugs. Multiple Myeloma: Whole Body Imaging With 18F-FDG PET/CT and 18F-FDOPA PET/CT. Asymptomatic myeloma patients may be at risk of early disease progression. This poses difficulties in early diagnosis and evaluation of therapeutic response. 18F-FDG PET/CT and 18F-FDOPA PET/CT are useful to characterize multiple 3da54e8ca3
